HORNIMAN MUSEUM AND GARDENS FOREST HILL, SOUTH LONDON

The Horniman Museum and Gardens is an inspiring and surprising attraction in Forest Hill, south London.

The Museum was opened in 1901 by tea trader and philanthropist Frederick Horniman with a vision to use his extraordinary collection to promote enjoyment, learning and a greater understanding of the world.

Since opening the original building, designed by Charles Harrison Townsend and featuring its landmark Clocktower, the Horniman has expanded significantly and the site has been augmented by a number of architecturally-significant developments. The Museum now houses internationally important collections of anthropology and musical instruments, a fascinating natural history gallery and an acclaimed aquarium.

These are complemented by 16 acres of beautiful Gardens which feature a Butterfly House and stunning views across the London skyline. The Gardens are also home to three unique venues which are available for private hire: the Conservatory, the Pavilion and the Bandstand.

The Horniman is a charity and all revenue helps support our rich and diverse educational, community engagement, conservation and artistic programmes.

NATURAL HISTORY GALLERY

With unique historic character, our Natural History Gallery is an unconventional location for filming and photography hire. This gallery first opened in 1901, and the design was influenced by the Arts and Crafts and Art Nouveau movements of the time.

Many of the original showcases remain, and displays are packed full of taxidermy, skeletons and specimens preserved in fluid, making the space an impressive backdrop.
